

United States Numbered Highways

For the Convenience of the Traveling Public a Limited System of State Roads Have Been Given Continuous Numbers Across the Country

For the past two years the State highway departments of the Nation have been working on a plan, in cooperation with the Department of Agriculture, of designating certain through roads with numbers that would be carried continuous from coast to coast. Naturally this carries a limited mileage, but it is believed that the system approved takes care of the major part of interstate traffic.

The plan adopted provides that roads running north and south shall be odd numbers and roads running east and west, even numbers. Necessarily there must be some diagonal routes joining these odd and even numbered routes. In laying out this system the highway officials felt that the simplicity of the plan adopted would be popular with the people, and in a large majority of the States the numbers chosen have already been erected. The total mileage involved in the routes selected is 96,626 miles. This includes the mileage through cities. In some instances, particularly in mountainous country, it is necessary, for short distances, that a road carry two numbers; but in such cases both numbers will be erected on the same post and it will not be at all confusing to the traveling public. The design adopted is the commonly known United States shield outline, and this shield carries the number as well as the State name through which the road passes.

The following descriptions of these routes have been prepared after careful observation and approval of the State officials of each State. The roads designated by these numbers do not have any preference over other roads on the Federal Aid Highway System, as far as construction and financing are concerned, but it is impossible to simplify interstate travel and have the entire Federal Aid System numbered according to this plan.
